

Mid-band target	cross 0 dB with about -20 dB/dec and keep the band reasonably wide
Why	larger phase margin usually means smaller overshoot; larger ω_c usually means faster response
Use case	quick performance estimation for minimum-phase systems with dominant dynamics
Boundary	this is an engineering estimate, not an exact equality for every high-order system
Required follow-up	compare with numerical simulation or exact time-domain calculation